33 The graph shows the I–V characteristic for a semiconductor diode.

Which statement can be deduced from the graph?

A Above a certain positive potential difference the diode obeys Ohm's law.

B Current is directly proportional to potential difference when the current in the diode is in one direction.

C The diode has zero resistance when the current in the diode is in one direction.

D The resistance of the diode depends upon the potential difference across it.